

International Women's Day

Today, as we do everyday, we commit ourselves to working towards the end of gender-based violence and the liberation of all women.

International Women's Day is about recognizing the contributions of women to all facets and sectors of our society. It is also about recognizing the prevalence of systemic barriers that impede equity for all women.

On campus and in our communities, we need to work towards the end of rape culture, sexism and misogyny. We need to be continuously working towards the end of racism, queerphobia, transphobia, violence against indigenous women, Black women, Muslim women, Disabled women, and low income women.

Affordable access to education, affordable access to social services including healthcare, reproductive healthcare, housing, and childcare, and access to safe and meaningful work are key to women's liberation. Ending war, occupation, and the exploitation of capitalism is key to women's liberation.

International Women's Day is a global day to celebrate women past, present, and future. Today and every day, we commit ourselves to continuing the work to achieve justice, to form solidarity across communities, and build a better future for all women.
